Why this panel?

- To raise awareness of the importance of language revitalization, cultural inclusion and localization
- Widen the network of academics, practitioners, educators, civic society, technologists, journalists and others doing this work
- Brainstorm ways to collaborate further
- To show examples of the tools we use are using for language revitalization, cultural preservation and identity formation of, especially, young indigenous people

Presenters

Maite Goñi @euskaljakintza Lecturer, Mondragon Unibertsitatea

Peter Rohloff @wuqukawoq Medical Director, Maya Health Alliance

Kevin Scannell @IndigenousTweet Professor, Saint Louis University

The Big Picture

Of 7105 living languages, 2473 are endangered according to UNESCO; half may be extinct by the start of the next century.

Hundreds of language groups around the world are working to revitalize and even revive their languages.

"As people of nations and cultures, we need to speak our languages. In order to stop them from dying, we only need to speak them: in our homes, to our children, to each other, on our land. It will redefine who we are, and it will be the single largest act of defiance we can make today towards a past that tried to kill us off."

Websites Run Locally

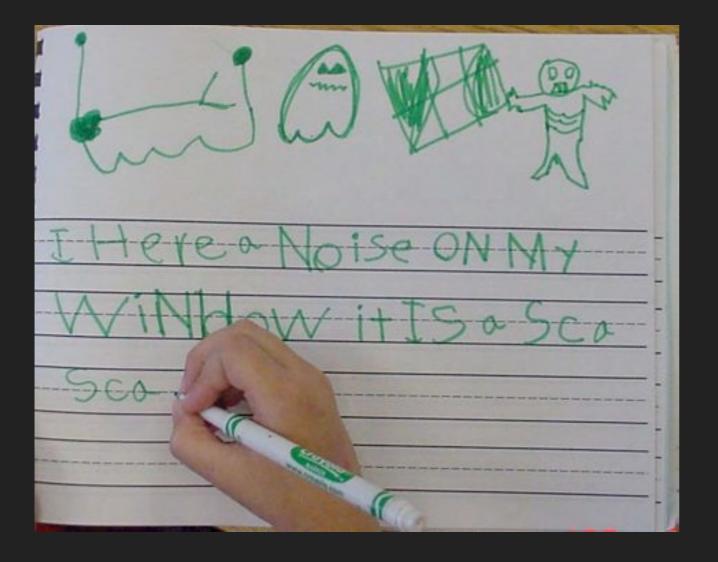

I was born in a town called Bananera in the northeastern part of Guatemala.

"I want you to tell our story, your story – here use this camera."

When my pictures were gone, my mother gave me a pen and pad of paper and said:

"Write it!"

Authorship

Now I teach people to tell their stories from anywhere...

Sometimes people use cellphones to tell their stories.

- In Central America there are more than 35 million cellphone users
- Guatemala is #4 in the Telecom sector in Latin America
- The Superintendency of
 - Telecommunications (SIT) cited there were almost 19.8 million registered mobile users in Guatemala as of June 2012

There are more cellphones than people!

Other times people tell their story by radio.

The National Movement of Radio Stations in Guatemala – with 168 radio stations and 1600 volunteers – uses cellphones to air local broadcasts in their own indigenous languages.

Sometimes they use video.

Chajul goes to the polls

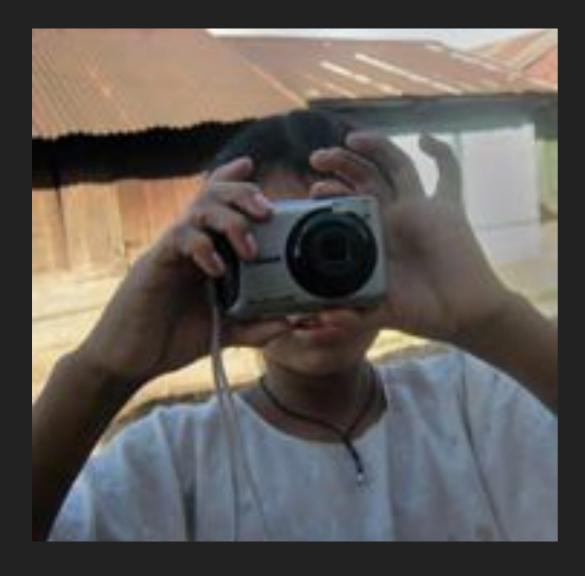

Indigenous voter in Chajul

Sometimes they blog from an internet cafe.

AffordableAccessibleLocal

But you always meet people where they're at.
